News release

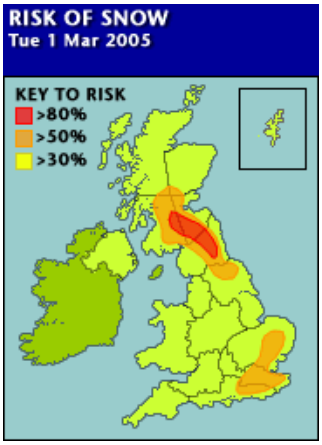
More winter weather to come

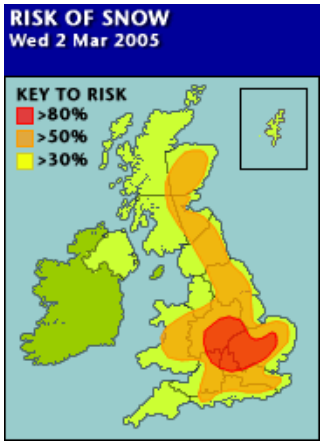
1 March 2005

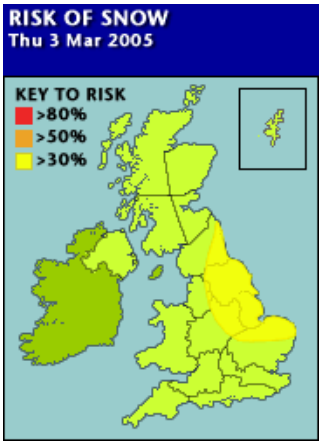
Wintry conditions and the risk of travel disruption are the main themes of the weather across the UK as we go through the first week of March.

Met Office forecasters are keeping a particularly close eye on a low pressure weather system that is predicted to move south across the country during the next twenty-four hours. Of particular concern is the increasing risk of rain turing to snow during Wednesday across central and southern England, leading to potential disruption to the transport network.

The maps show the risk of significant snow for the UK through the next few days. This information will be regularly updated through this week, and weather warnings will be issued as the situation develops. The precise distribution of the snow is unclear at this stage and the public are advised to stay in touch with the latest weather forecasts and National Severe Weather Warnings through the Met Office web site, local radio or TV.







Latest forecast for the UK

UK warnings of severe weather

What to do in severe weather

For updated information on the road and rail network visit the Highways Agency and National Rail Enquiries

For further information:
Met Office Press Office +44 (0)1392 886655
E-mail: pressoffice@metoffice.gov.uk

Met Office Customer Centre 0870 900 0100
If you're outside the UK +44 (0)1392 885680

© Crown copyright